"The dual-degree program between George Washington University (GWU) of the USA and Azerbaijan State Pedagogical University (ASPU) gives dozens of our young people the opportunity to benefit from better educational opportunities. It is expected that under this program, up to 130 of our young people will be trained as international-level experts in educational policy and administration".

This was stated by the Minister of Science and Education, Emin Amrullayev, during his speech at the second graduation event of the ASPU-GWU dual-degree master's program, which took place on June 23.

Emin Amrullayev praised the implementation of the program. He stressed that bringing international experience in education administration to our country and training young professionals of high level is one of the priority directions of state policy. The Minister noted that over the past few years, as a result of dual degree programs between Azerbaijani universities and foreign universities, hundreds of potential young people have been given the opportunity to study at prestigious universities at the expense of the state without leaving the country.

The event was attended by Bakhtiyar Aslanbeyli, Vice President of "BP Azerbaijan," Colin Green, professor at the CWU's Graduate School of Education and Human Development, as well as representatives of the diplomatic corps, the private sector, sector heads of higher and secondary special education institutions, representatives of ASPU and George Washington University, and graduates of the program.

ASPU Rector Jafar Jafarov noted in his speech that the first 22 people who graduated from the program last year are now successfully working in various fields of education and economy, in the private and public sectors. Today marks the graduation of another 19 people who successfully completed the program.

Colin Green, professor at the CWU's Graduate School of Education and Human Development congratulated the graduates of the program. Dean Michael Feuer's video greeting was shown.
