“School Management Program” training has been held at the Institute for the Professional Development of Education Workers. Initiated by the Institute of Education, the training was organized in partnership with UNICEF Azerbaijan.

The training aimed to promote school principals` awareness of the advanced education system and effective school management.

It was conducted by Jumaat Bin Masdawood, an educator at the National Institute of Education, Singapore.

The training featured interactive sessions on a range of topics, including leadership, time management, and development of communication skills.

The training involved 28 selected school principals.

The National Institute of Education is Singapore's national teacher education institute. It is an integral part of the country`s education service.

The institute was ranked first by the Programme for International Student Assessment (PISA) in 2015.
